

Memory Quilt goes on display at London Jewish Museum

News stories on 9 December 2015 from BBC London

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/live/uk-england-london-35015405>

Posted at 11:23

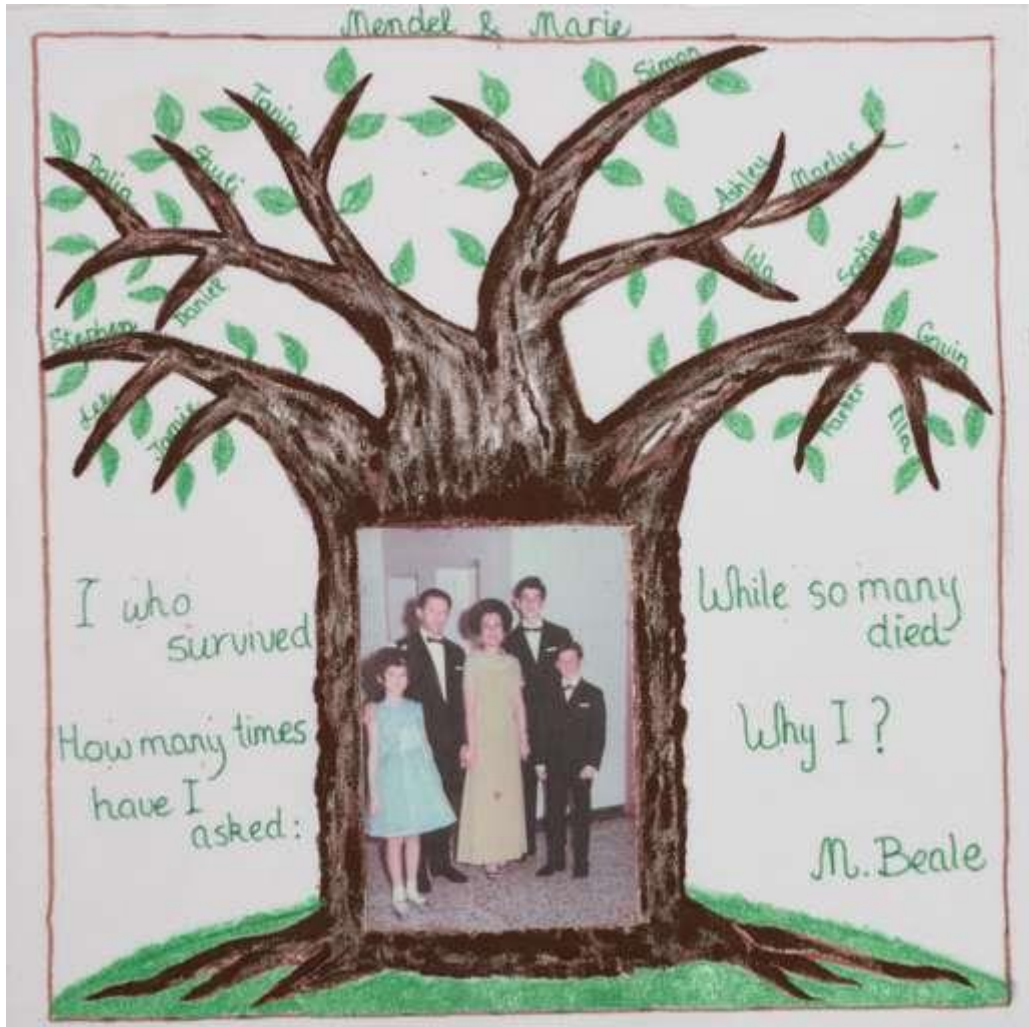

Holocaust survivors have created a memory quilt to celebrate 70 years in the UK.

45 Aid Society

Survivors and their families lit candles and gave speeches as the quilt went on display at the London Jewish Museum.

The series of four quilts are part of a free exhibition that is open until February 2016.

Mendel Beale

'How can we turn away refugees?' asks Holocaust survivor

Posted at 11:37

Jan Goldberger, who came to England from Theresienstadt concentration camp in 1945, gave a speech as Holocaust survivors celebrated 70 years in the UK.

"How can you turn away people who are fleeing to save their life?" he asked.

"Of course we should take them."

Janek Goldberger

Mr Goldberger was born in Bielsko Biala, Poland in 1927.

He came to the UK after the war with a young group of holocaust survivors who became known as The Boys.

The remaining Boys and their families have created a series of memory quilts that are on display at the Jewish Museum in London.

45 Aid Society